

Still on the road

I am writing this from Salt Lake City, which I will leave in an hour, headed to the airport, and from there to Phoenix. Five cities to go.

Backing up, though, playing catch-up: first San Jose, at Hicklebee's wonderful store, which I have visited many times before. Great crowd. Then a very relaxing day with my daughter in San Francisco: brunch by the ocean, then a walk in the Japanese Garden at Golden Gate Park. I needed that break. And she had my laundry done! A talk that night at the SF Library; and then off the next morning to SLC. Last night I spoke to an overflow crowd of 600 or so at the Provo Library, which is in a specatacuar historic building. Then LONG signing lines. Such enthusiastic people. A lovely evening. But tiring for an old lady!

I am having to grab time here and there to answer email, and I have a request for teachers, if any are reading this. Please send ONE email whihc can include comments, questions, etc., from your students...as opposed to individual emails from kids. It
