It's hard to believe that it is a month since I posted anything here. So busy! And a lot of company. Today I am alone...though expecting a writer friend who lives in Portland for lunch...so I'll take a minute to update things.

My granddaughter 19, finished her almost-3-months in Costa Rica, where she was attending language immersion school and also volunteering in a national refuge for rescued animals, and came here for a brief visit before returning to Germany. She came away with a great love of the country, a lot of new friends from everywhere, and a conversational comfort with Spanish.

There was a tragic interruption when one of the volunteers was murdered by poachers/drug runners. He had been patrolling sea turtle nests at night, guarding the eggs, which bring a hefty price and are therefore valuable to poachers. There is now a reward for the capture of the murderers and there has been a lot of publicity (google MURDER LIMON COSTA RiCA), but no arrest yet, and it was a devastating set of events for young idealistic volunteers.

Here is Nadine, with a knkajou, which is actually related to the raccoon family. She also worked with baby monkeys.

What is the best way to get the most out of your trip? The answer is simple: take a lot of photos. You'll want to capture every moment of your trip, from the sunrise to the sunset, from the first sight of the beach to the last sight of the beach. So, make sure you have a camera with you at all times, and don't forget to charge it before you go. And, of course, don't forget to take a few photos of yourself. You'll want to have a record of your trip, and a few photos of you will be a nice reminder of the good times.

The world is a big place and you are a small part of it. But all of us have the same thing in common: we are all here for a reason.

and just in case you're not sure, I've included a link to the original post on my mouse,

My grandmothers, this is my mother. If the parents, it is hard to tell the male from the female
